The child was found face down in the ditch at approximately 1:15 p.m. Her mother pulled her body from the ditch and a brother, Raymond Keith Simms, immediately started artificial respiration but there was no response. J. R. Bratcher of Blue Ridge and Dr. Jack Webb and Dr. Tom Allison both of Farmersville, assisted.

It was reported that when she was moved from the ditch she had some pecans in her mouth, and also had a bruise on her head.

Frightening Experience

The many friends of the Monroe Passons are glad to know that they are recovering nicely from a frightening ordeal.

On Tuesday morning when Mr. Passons didn't appear at his shop, farmers needing work done, became uneasy. Johnny Myers went to the home. In time Mrs. Passons was aroused enough to unlock the door, though she was terribly sick. Both she and Monroe had been in a semi-conscious state, knowing they were sick, yet not conscious of time, or condition. It was eleven o'clock in the morning and they were due to have been hours before for they retired at 9:00 o'clock the night before.

An open window is credited with saving them for the fumes created from a refrigerator (even though it was still lighted) would have been stronger in a closed room.

Mrs. Passons recommends that people should take warning and have a fresh air intake in their sleeping rooms.
